E. coli and other pathogens are an issue that can affect the entire future of the fair and exhibition industry.

The Canadian Association of Fairs and Exhibitions, working with the International Association of Fairs and Expositions (IAFE) and Technical Solutions International (TSI), will be delivering a series of one-day workshops in communities across Canada from January 2007 through May 2008.

These workshops offer an in-depth look at E. coli and other dangerous pathogens, teaching event managers and organizers how to develop, write, and implement consumer protection plans for events where humans and farm animals may interact.

The workshops will include information on:

- Understanding pathogens and analyzing your facility
- Improving operational procedures and sanitation programs
- Identifying contact zones and determining corrective actions and
- Designing and operating a planned contact area
- Developing record keeping and process verification programs

Who should attend?

If you work in the fair and exhibition industry, or organize an event that features the potential for human and farm animal interaction, you can not afford to miss this workshop.
For example:

- Fair Mangers
- 4H Event organizers
- Petting zoo operators
- agriculture managers/volunteers

Why should you attend?

- Better understand the complexities associated with individual facilities and apply newly learned concepts to your specific location for appropriate pathogen reduction or control programs.
- Reduce your liability and the potential for litigation by protecting your consumers.
- Learn the importance of this issue and incorporate the information and tools into a "new and improved" facility.
- Share your knowledge and be proactive in an issue that is very important to your industry.
- You will leave with a starter kit designed to be customized to your facility and will give you a "running start" at improving consumer protection programs.
