In his Inspection Report on Northern Transport, March 1893, James MacDougall wrote: Captain Favel is about 65 years of age, handles the boat fairly well, and is careful and economical but is lacking in discipline. Any ill effects of the latter however are obviated by the presence of the District Officer who is usually on board. The arrangement with regard to Favel is economical and satisfactory but he will probably not long be able to continue at the work.... (D.25/17, fo. 321-322).

Parents: Thomas Favel [see Biog.] and Sally, a Cree woman.

W.F. Butler encountered Favel in 1870 and reported the story that "a couple of years before he had foully murdered a comrade in one of the passes of the Rocky Mountains when returning from British Columbia." (The Great Lone Land, ch. xvi, p. 253.)
